MAY DETECT CRIME BY PSYCHOLOGY

Prof. Hugo Munsterberg Demonstrates New Theory to College Girls.

AN READ WOMAN'S MIND

Radcliffe Students are Unable to Misdread the Experimenter.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 21—Prof. Hugo Munsterberg recently gave a demonstration of his psychological method of determining crime before the class of philosophy in Radcliffe College, a feminine annex to Harvard. Taking three girl volunteers as subjects, the professor proved that no matter how they attempted to evade him, he could read their minds, or rather their actions, as manifestations of what was in their minds.

Besides demonstrating his own theory Professor Munsterberg proved that he had solved the problem of reading a woman's mind, and that in future the thoughts of the wife will be an open book to the husband. The possibilities of the professor's demonstration can hardly be estimated.

Girls Given Newspaper Clippings.
The girls who submitted to the test are Helen Thayer of the class of 1911, Ruby Hobb, a senior, and Miss Benton of the class of 1912. The professor told the class that he had several clippings from a morning paper in every day subjects. He would have the three girls each draw a clipping in such a way that he would not see the drawing. Then he would find out from them what clipping they had.

The condition the professor imposed was that when he said a word the girl spoken to should within a second say some other word brought into her mind. Professor Munsterberg asked each of the three girls to try and receive him as to which clipping they had, just as a criminal would try to mislead him in trying to detect what time he had committed.

Pause in Answering.
The professor shot several words at random at the first girl and she answered back as quickly with any word that came into her head. When a word connected prominently with the clipping was sprung, however, there was a significant pause, for the first thought injected in the girl's mind was the clipping and she instantly exposed that before she was able to think up something with which to mislead Munsterberg.

One of the clippings drawn by the girls was of ex-President Roosevelt's reception by the Emperor of Germany. When Professor Munsterberg sprung the word emperor on the girl who held the clipping, she could not answer without a pause. The pause in the first test was eighteen seconds, in the last two tests, about half that time.

This Radcliffe College test was regarded as the most successful demonstration Professor Munsterberg has so far made of the psychological method of detecting crime. A short time ago, however, he experimented with a man suspected with forging a check and his plan worked perfectly. A significant pause followed both the word "bank" and "check" when addressed to the suspected man.

CANES AND CONFETTI
These With Psychic Photos and Dancing, Featured In Academic Carnival.

Lured by the magnetic voice of the "spieler," girls and boys and faculty men and women crowded into the "Photograph Gallery" on the Pike of the Academic Carnival last night. They came out one by one, giggling girls and guilty-looking, embarrassed men. They were "hit" by the camera man. Inside their pictures were taken by a psychical camera and the sympathetic vibrations produced the picture of their future husband or wife. One girl's future husband was the man whom above all she declared she "just hated." She went in for a second husband, but the photographer told her they did not cater to Mormons and her second husband was a blank card. Now she wears a wondering expression on her face.

At the "Fishing Pond," students fished out "knocks" with long fishing poles. Some other shows were: "The Passion Play As Seen by a Student" and the "Rock Cave."

Of course there were showers of confetti. "Yes you may have this dance!" someone would begin when swish!—a handful of confetti stopped all conversation for a few seconds. But the university girls are developing skill as confetti-throwers and some displayed a prowess that caught the men unawares.

Unsuspecting couples sauntering along, blissfully eating ice cream cones soon had them peppered with confetti. But what did that matter? Paper forms a good diet sometimes. The girls sold lots of other good things to eat, sandwiches, which one student remarked were "scientific" compounds, and lemonade.

The dancing began near 10 o'clock on the second floor of Academic Hall and lasted until the university lights winked three times—12 o'clock.

THE GOVERNOR'S COMET

Two Negroes Discuss the Streak of Light they Saw in Sky.

"I'll certainly be glad when that Hadley's comet goes away."

Two negroes were discussing the comet on a street corner down town Friday night. They seemed greatly disturbed by the great streak of light across the sky Thursday night and their first view of the comet Friday night.

One feared the end of the world was coming. The other did not believe the end of the world was coming but he wished "Hadley's comet" would leave.

NOT ENOUGH NAMES

Alumni Recorder Says Signatures to Mill Tax Come too Slowly.

There is a lack of interest in the proposed state mill-tax amendment. Names are coming in too slowly at the present time to insure the success of the amendment. Dr. W. G. Bek, alumni recorder of the university, said yesterday:

"Signatures are coming in at the rate of about 150 a day, but this is not fast enough. They must increase if the necessary number of signatures is obtained by July 1. About 28,000 signatures are needed."

N. T. Gentry, a lawyer of Columbia, who is circulating petitions, says that no one has refused to sign the petition when it has been explained. He thinks that the necessary number of signers would soon be obtained if the circulation of the petitions was "pushed."

In order that this amendment may be presented to the voters of the state next November it must bear the signatures of 5 per cent of the voters in two-thirds of the sixteen congressional districts of the state. The number of voters is taken on the basis of the number of votes cast at the last election of the supreme judges of the state. The petitions must be filed with the secretary of state by July 1.

About 450 signatures have been obtained in Columbia. A total of 1646 signatures is needed from the eighth congressional district.
